

Call 4 — Internal call on account coverage

Anonymised call transcript

INTERNAL Ylookup call, not a client meeting. Anonymised and condensed; client names, colleague names and delivery locations removed. Review before circulating — the substance is commercial strategy rather than a workflow. Covers roughly the first half of the call.

Ylookup (A) We need sub-leads. I was thinking of an overall methodology that matches the broader go-to-market approach. On the largest account I would take commercials, procurement and the API workstream. You take the lead on business line expansion in Europe and the US for now, and I will take the Asia-Pacific one, because it is a capacity question — there is an enormous amount of work there.

Ylookup (A) When we get to user groups, and it is purely user groups, we bring in a third colleague.

Ylookup (A) The one change I would propose from what we discussed is US investor services. I had said we would see, but I think it may make sense for you to take it. To give you the capacity, hand the delivery centre over to our colleague and let him reset goals around it — right now that account is pure user expansion and activation, and we should have him doing workflow mapping with them instead.

Ylookup (B) I agree. We have a daily call with that team, so I can bring him in there. Your suggestion is that he leads the reconciliation workstream going forward?

Ylookup (A) I think so, if you are comfortable with it. You keep the primary seat in the relationship. On relationships of that type, regardless of which of us is leading, I would like the other one to keep a relationship too — so if there is something happening with them, the other one goes along where we can make it work.

Ylookup (A) Ultimately the primary relationship owner would be you on the US accounts, me on Asia-Pacific, and you take Europe for now and we see how it develops.

Ylookup (A) The goal would be that with a new sector — real estate, for example — once we are up and running, you would not hand it over.
